Say no to grammar school expansion

The Tories have announced plans for new grammar schools in England.

That decision isn't about giving working class students a better education as they claim. They are trying to go back to the days of a two tier education system. In the 1950s, before Comprehensive schools, working class students went to second class "secondary modern" schools while the middle classes went to grammar schools (and the rich to private schools).

Academies were the first step in privatising our education system. Now Theresa May is making sure that only a select few get a decent education. We want a decent local school for every child!
