

In 1968 protests against the old order swept the world. From the general strike in France to the Tet Offensive in Vietnam, from the Black Panthers in the US to the student occupations in Paris, the movement was contagious.

As the year progressed, people increasingly gained a sense of their own collective power, and the vulnerability of the ruling classes that had previously seemed unstoppable. Suddenly everything was up for grabs.

But this is not a nostalgia trip. We still live in a world scarred by war, exploitation and bigotry. 1968 has a lot to teach us today. Come and join the debate about the lessons of that tumultuous year.
