DUMP TRUMP SACK MAY

The protests against Donald Trump and Theresa May have been a brilliant show of defiance and solidarity.

We are not going to stand by while Trump attacks Muslims and migrants. We are not going to let him take away women's rights, assault LGBT+ people, or despoil the environment.

And we aren't going to stop protesting against his collaborator in 10 Downing Street.

The protests need to get bigger, to escalate and to go deeper. Numbers matter. Big marches give everyone confidence and show how many people are ready to stand against racism and Trump's other crimes.

Build the movement

These protests will be even stronger if they feed into the workplaces, the colleges and the schools. The anger on the streets this week has to connect with the issues of the NHS, the attacks against migrants here, and the endless austerity measures.

And we need a mass turnout on the 18 March Stand Up To Racism demos in London, Cardiff and Glasgow.

If Trump or any of his henchmen come to Britain there need to be occupations, road blockades and walkouts. These aren't ordinary times.

Let's fight to build a movement that can drive out Trump and May. But let's also fight to get rid of the capitalist system that produces them.

Trump, just like Theresa May, is the expression of a sick capitalist system which puts profits before people.

Trump's racism is founded on the legacy of slavery in the US – a legacy manifested in the stark inequalities that continue to scar the States today - not least in the frequent police killings of black people.

His repellent sexism reflects a society where women are still discriminated against, frequently patronised or ridiculed and often face violence.

Trump's disregard for the environment flows from predecessors who drew back from placing the slightest obstacle in the way of corporate power.

Fight for socialism

It is a system where eight billionaires own as much combined wealth as the poorest half of the world's population.

We need to fight every example of racism, sexism and homophobia – but also to tear out the roots of all oppression. We need a socialist society.

It has been great to see the Labour Party elect a left wing leader. We are on Jeremy Corbyn's side against the right-wingers. But Labour is still dominated by pro-business MPs and bureaucrats.

And as the EU crushing Greece's Syriza government showed, electing left wingers is not enough to overcome the unelected bosses.

In the struggles that have taken on Trump we can glimpse the potential of ordinary people to change the world.

Winning change takes organisation. The Socialist Workers Party wants to work with as broad a range of people as possible against Trump and May. But we're also building a socialist force at the centre of all these movements.

If you want to be part of fighting to change the world, join us.
